

Annual General Meeting 16 to 18 October 2009

People supportive of Canada's air force join the Air Force Association of Canada to share a common purpose, a unique air force identity and their common experiences. This process assures that they become a source of important air force information, ideas and initiatives. Alexis de Tocqueville marvelled at this phenomenon, when in 1830 he wrote Democracy in America. He remarked how readily individuals affiliate with one another to propose a common object, to inculcate some truth or to foster some feeling by the encouragement of a great example. Respectively: many would agree that a common object to which members of the Air Force Association of Canada are devoted is a well-equipped, well-trained and operationally ready Canadian air force; a truth which members wish to inculcate in all Canadians is that such an air force is critical for their security; and, finally, from its earliest days, the foremost example, of such an air force, on which has been derived great encouragement, and which continues to evoke a feeling of pride, has been the war-time era Royal Canadian Air Force. Since then, thousands of Canadians have added to this bedrock example of an air force, as evidenced by the dedication and commitment of the men and women who have served and continue to serve in Canada's air force through countless peace-keeping operations and combat around the world, in the decades following the Second World War - altogether a great source of pride for all Canadians. It is to celebrate this history and heritage that we gather, during the Annual General Meeting of the Air Force Association of Canada to be held in Trenton, ON from 16 to 18 October 2009.
